Headstreams volunteers and children interacting through play.

Ask a child let's study? One will most likely hear a 'no'. But, ask the child if he or she wants to play? One definitely hears a loud and clear 'yes' and witnesses a face brimming with joy. This is because children are ever motivated to play. It is a space of interaction and learning for them and most importantly it's something they enjoy thoroughly.

Headstreams, an non-profit organisation in Bengaluru was started in 2008 when a group of professionals from various fields came together with the goal of making a difference in the society. Their activities gained momentum over the years as several people joined them. Their work has spanned from self-help groups, relief-work in flood-affected areas, livelihood training which includes entrepreneurship development, awareness programmes and financial literacy, to courses in digital and English literacy for women.
